

English for Economists

The English language has emerged as the world's most popular language in business. Most multinational corporations, regardless of their country of origin, frequently use English as their official language, requiring all internal communications to be in English. Participating in this course enables students to understand, actively use and talk about the key concepts in business and economics. The course primarily focuses on the vocabulary students can come across in the fields of management, macroeconomics, entrepreneurship, business ethics, and others. It also introduces the terms and concepts students will come across while reading books, magazines, newspapers and browsing through web pages closely connected to business practice and the global economic situation, and use them in written and oral communication.
